ART ITEMS.

-At Weston's, in Broadway, may be seen a picture by Banvard, of panoramic celebrity, called the "Orison." It is the first work of the kind that has been exhibited from the pencil of this industrious artist, and its general excellence took us by surprise. It is an oil painting, representing an actual view in the cloisters of the Convent of St. Eustache, in the large di Gardo. A lamp is burning before a shrine of the Madonna, at which a woman is kneeling, while the broad day of the landscape contrasts forcibly with the semi-gloom and artificial light of the cloisters. The interest of the picture is meant to lie, not in the praying figure, but in the effects of color and the architectural illusion of the perspective. It is intended, we understand, to be reproduced as a lithographic print, in chromo-tint, for which purpose it was expressly painted. -On the fifth story of the building in which Banvard's painting is exhibited there is a long range of "attic cells," occupied by various artists as studios, and, in one of them there is inscribed in rather loud Roman letters " Van Beest, Marine Painter." Let not the lover of marine pictures omit to tap for admission to Mynheer Van Beest's studio, for on entering, he will see sights that can be seen nowhere else in New-York. Mr. Van Beest was born in Holland, and his first view of the world was a stormy one; if he had been born in Noah's ark he could not have made a more auspicious commencement for the career of a marine painter. But Mr. Van Beest was not satisfied with being born in Holland; he entered the Russian Navy as a mid-supman, and, and seeing service in the Blattic, the Black Sea, and the Mediterranean, he could be set 77 fb. went to Norway, from Norway to the coast of Brazil, and thence down South, sketching the wild source of Patagonia, and among the Beach-combers of Busines Ayres; thence on to the Fulkland Islands, and so on to the Pacific. From San Francisco he came over land to New-York, and after his arrival here, still continued his search for the sublimities of coast-scenery, spending a long time among the breakers at Sancoty Head, and making studies of the weather beaten old whalers which lie rotting at the wharves in Nantucket. His studio is full of sketches and half finished paintings of the various seenes he has visited, and of terrific imaginings of his own of sufferings at sen, of shipwrecks, and battles. He is among murine painters what Michael Angelo is among sculptors. Such tremendous force and vigorous expression as he puts upon canvas, we have never seen before. He unites the excellences of Gedin, Biard, and Stansfield, with a technical knowledge and vigor of execution which neither of these marine painters can boast of. He is now engaged on a large painting for a gentleman in New-Orleans, representing the attack on the privateer General Armstrong, in the harbor of Fayal, by the boats of a British squadron. It is one of the finest sea fights that we have seen on canvas, and we under stand that he is to paint the same subject for one of the vacant panels in the new Capitol at Washington. It is not at all creditable to our Government that none of the victories achieved by our navy are represented among our national pictures, and it will not be creditable if the first sea fight placed in the Capitol should be a skirmish on board a privateer. Mr. Van Becet should be employed to paint some of the fierce engagements of Paul Jones or the great victories achieved by our frigates in our last war with Great Britain. Among the sketches in Mr. Van Beest's studio, are some of terrific power. One of them represents the great Geyser in Iceland, belching up a buge column of water, with rocks flying up like feathers, while in the distance is seen the flery cone of Mt. Heels gleaming through the frozen air. Another is the cartoon of a picture which he has painted for the Emperor of Austria, since he has been in New-York, which represents three men clinging to a wreck at sea, one of whom is looking with despairing energy through the blinding spray, while another has just lost his hold of the space on which they cling, and is sinking into the deep. There is such force and vigor, such naturalness and power of imagination in the sketch, that it makes one shadder to look at it. This remarkable ar ist accomplishes with his pencil what our countryman Cooper has done with the pen; and his copious portfolic should bear for its motto:

"List ye landsmen all to me.
Alexamates hear a brother sallor
Sing the dangers of the sea."

-While speaking of marine pictures, we will men tion that Mr. Geo. L. Brown has recently added to his collection, at No. 768 Broadway, a re narkably fine work of his which has not been exhibited here before, though it has been some time in the possession of the gentleman for whom it was painted. It is a view on the Bay of Naples: there is a brisk brosze, a large fishing-boat occupies the center of the picture, and Vesuvins is smoking away in the distance. Similar scenes have been painted hundreds of times, but we have rarely seen a brick breeze on the water more happily or vigorously represented.

-Signor Junea, the tall base singer of the Academy of Music, has a remarkable talent for marine subjects; we have seen some of his charcoal sketches a Dechaux's which would do credit to a professional

-There is on exhibition at Williams & Stevens's, in Broadway, a piece of work in a gitt frame which cannot be properly called a picture, nor yet a work of high art; but it is a work of art which gives proof of the patient industry by which alone works of high art can be produced. It is a tribute to Washington, executed with pen and ink, by Prof. Leutty, a Swiss by birth, but for many years a resident of New-York. It was done for Mr. James Meyer, jr., of Beaver street, and occupied two years of the Professor's time. The Professor was once head pastrycook for Delmonico; he was afterward engaged as an engineer on a railway, and was with Gen. Taylor, in the cavalry, during the Mexican war. -On Wednesday next the 29th inst., there is to be a sale at the rooms of the National Academy of Paintings, of sketches and studies from nature, by George H. Hall, an artist who has gained considerable reputation within a comparatively brief period by his very basatiful little studies of still life. Mr. Hall has painted a large number of small figure pieces which evince great talent; but his line evidently lies in such quiet subjects as fruits and flowers. A full-sized head of Don Quisote in his study, exhibited at the last annual exhibition of the National Academy, attracted a great deal of attention. It has been hanging in the parlor of the Athenaum Club during the past year, but it is included in the pieces to be sold on Wednesday. Most of the pictures are small, and some of them are exquisitely finished.

There are about 140 of them. The artist, we understand, is induced to sell them at auction on account of his intended departure for Europe in the Spring. - Mr. J. Hope has recently finished an admirable view of Mount Me Intyre, in the Adirondack region. presenting a prospect of a very extended range in that highly picturesque country. The view is taken from North Etha in the immediate neighborhood of John Brown's farm, though when the artist selected his point of observation he was not aware that the spot would acquire such a notoriety from its being the residence of the then undeveloped hero of Harper's Ferry. The picture has been most carefully studied and finished, and is highly creditable to the artist's talents. It

Broadway and Houston street where he has many highly-finished sketches of Northern scenery. -Mr. George G. Fish has in studio, adjoining that of Mr. Hope, an extremely fine life-size portrast in pastille, on his easel of Mrs. Allen of the Winter Garden. He has also a cha acteristic head in pastille of Mr. William Lawton of New-Rochelle, of blackberry may be seen at Mr. Hope's Studio on the corner of reputation. -At the reunion of the Athenseum Club on Wedneseay night, were exhibited some admirable pistures by Mr. Eastman Johnson, the painter of the "Old Kentucky Home." One of them was a portrait of Mr. G. C. Scott, remarkable for its finish, its fine color and the correstness of the likeness. Another was a charming piece of genre painting, which would have done credit to Edouard Frerg. It was called "Waising," and represented a pair of rustic lovers standing beneath a dove cote and saying tender things to each other. The figures are painted with exquisite tenderness of feeling, and the atmosphere is imbued with warmth and loveliness. The doves are parts of the drama, rather than accessories, and billing and cooing would be a much happier title for the picture than waiting.

-Mr. Page is engaged in painting another Venus in Rome. Mr. Young, the editor of The Albion, who is at present in Rome, says in one of his letters from

is at present in Rome, says in one of his letters from the Eternal City:

"Mr. Page's Venus—number 3, if I mistake not—is not yet sufficiently advanced toward finish, to enable one to speak of it with confidence. Still, in drawing and in color, it is certain that it will prove another masterpiece. In color especially Mr. Page has scarcely a rival. He has studied deeply the secrets of the Venetian school, and has fathomed some of its most expressive mysteries. On an easel, side by side with the Venus, stands a half complete picture of Aaron and Hur upholding the hands of Moses, while Josana 'prevailed' in fight against the Am dekites. It promises o be a great success and a legitimate one."

FELL PROK a WINDOW,—On Thursday afternoon, a ittle girl, named Emma Oveibart, aged three years, fell from the hird story window of house No. 139 Rivington street, to the avenment, causing inspant death. The Coroner was notified to hold an inquest on the body.

ARANDONED INFANTS.—On Thursday night, an infant was found in an ash-barrel in front of house No. 32 East 29th street, confortably wrapped up in flamels, and apparently but just abundoned. It was sent to the Alms-House...On Thorsely afternoon, the dead body of an infant was found floating in the East River, at the foot of 19th street. It was taken to Bellevas Heepital, where the Coroner will held an inquest.
